Medieval Kashan:

Crossroads of Commerce and Culture

Professor Roy Mottahedeh
Gurney Professor of History
Harvard University

The medieval Iranian city of Kashan had an international reputation for its artisanal traditions, in particular, the manufacture of luxury ceramics. Its strong educational institutions produced a significant number of talented officials for the Seljuq and later administrations and some of the most important mathematicians and astronomers of the medieval period. It was a center of Shi’ism and Shi’ite learning almost continuously through its history.

Thursday, April 12th, 2018
at 6:30pm, Federal Room, IMU

Please direct any questions to nelc@indiana.edu or (812) 855-5993

Co-sponsored by the Center for the Study of the Middle East; Departments of Central Eurasian Studies, Comparative Literature, Folklore and Ethnomusicology, and History; the Islamic Studies Program and the Mathers Museum of World Cultures

--open to the public, including all graduate and undergraduate students, light refreshments will be served--